... of light and shadow, forgoing work, moving to new places, and wearing gold and other materials which are known to ward off evil." Like many other Vedic astrologers, he believed that the position of the stars at birth determined the personality and destiny of the individual. The zodiac signs, planets and stars had personal significance in his life and work. For example, he defined the planet Jupiter in the feminine form of "Jyesti" and used it as a powerful protective amulet. He had several related practices which were derived from the Vedic tradition. One such technique involved uttering the word "Astra" (literally translated from Sanskrit as "star") during times of danger or during sleep. In this manner, the sun, moon, and stars were invoked to protect the individual. Similarly, he believed that Vedic rituals at particular seasons of the year or times of day could influence the individual's own fate. He claimed that zodiac signs were based on the Vedic concept of Ashta (eight) dakshina, a traditional concept related to the daily motions of the planets. He believed that the man called "Krodh" would be born in Aries in April, and if he was unmarried at the time of his birth, the man born in Aries would be naturally inclined to hard work. He claimed that the man called "Prathyaksha" would be born in Gemini in June, and he was naturally inclined to trade and commerce.
