The Islamic book that has been the authority on the Quranic verse's meanings and laws since al-Tabari was the first to publish it. This book was used from the eighth to the fifteenth century. The earliest part in English was written at the end of the ninth century. The second part was published around 1194. The Arabic version was published in 1399 by the English author John Fletcher. In this work, the first six Arabic verses of the Quranic law can be found with the following comment made by Muhammed:.

In the section "Tafsir of the Holy Quran" the author presents many Madhhab books, each written by one of the most eminent Muhamadan scholars of his time. He does this, without any pre-positioning of books for each one he chooses and in plain reading. This book is very well recommended as a source of guidance and practical knowledge concerning Madhhab, particularly those for the Muslims, even if he does not offer specific examples of the book or of each of the individual pages.. (Bidaya Tadaqatul-Hidayah, Vol 12.02) Mughrabi and other books on Madhhab are well established for a variety of religious reasons. However, many of them are more concerned with the details concerning the practical realities in a culture and society with many different aspects. Some can be found in many books available on the internet. The main sources of scholarly literature on Madhhab are the above three:.. On the other hand, it seems to me that a fair number of Muhamadan books on Madhhab do not really deal in terms of the practical reality of daily life and of the ways of behaving and living among Muslims.

This may be because they do not really deal with the details of the basic Muslim obligations. In these cases, the author does not write as deeply as he should. The main source for these writings are the other Muhamada books on Madhhab. Therefore, I suggest to look for one or more of these Muhamada books in search of relevant practical resources..
